

PRESSRELEASE

Whoa Tunes

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Contact: Kristina Powell

Email: WhoaTunes@gmail.com

Indie Song "You're a Drug" Released by Whoa Tunes

Freshly Minted Non-Artist Writes First Song at Age 50

Kristina Powell, creator of Whoa Tunes, has finished her first mind-meddling melody, "You're a Drug", a rock-Indie-esque compilation.

What's interesting about Kristina is that her first few decades were spent in the health and fitness industry, not music.

She jokes that getting a thump on the noggin in martial arts, or maybe while riding her quad, turned on her lyrical mind.

The song "You're a Drug" is a provocative reflection on the pain of love and loss. Our singer describes the ebb and whirl of losing a lover, and suspects hormonal catalysts.

The artists examine the often painful chemistry of love and loss. We're all deeply challenged when unplugging from love's high...and rue the dark firing of feelings.

"Am I just high or is it love...That's telling me I can't live...Without your mind-blowing kiss...?"

"You're a Drug" is wrought with an ache that's perfect for a break-up...or breakthrough...kind of mood. It feels analytically haunting and elusive.

For more information about "You're a Drug" or Whoa Tunes, email WhoaTunes@gmail.com.

Details and access:

"You're a Drug" on Bandcamp

More private links: Soundcloud, Whoa Tunes, Distrokid, YouTube

Kristina's other misadventures